HANFORD AND HIS AMERICAN PLAY

Shakspearean Actor Tells Why He Likes His Newest Play.

The motives which led Charles B. Hanford to interpret his career in the classes of Shakespeare to present a play to the subject of some curiosity. Mr. Hanford rather resents the suggestion that he is abandoning an ideal or risking any disappointment for auditors who have learned to rely on him as the standard bearer of the Shakspearean drama in this country. In proof of his loyalty to the classic cause he calls attention to the fact that "The Taming of the Shrew" is still retained in his repertory.

"I recognize that being a free country, every man is entitled to exact from his public servants both in political and in artistic life, the kind of service that best pleases him. The public is the supreme critic. It deals with a subject by impression rather than by intellectual analysis; but its conclusions like those reached by a woman's intuition, as the novelists call it, are usually correct."

"Why do you prefer your present vehicle, 'The American Lord,' to Shakspeare?" "I dare not say I prefer it to Shakspeare. I once knew a man who had written a most creditable drama in blank verse. It had every prospect of success until an over-enthusiastic management advertised the author as 'the American Shakspeare.' I selected 'The American Lord' because, when my life long manager, F. Lawrence Walker, brought the manuscript to my attention it appealed to me so strongly. It was my ideal of what an American play should be—humorous without descending to burlesque; robust in its plot interest without being melodramatic and patriotic without the introduction of artificial platitudes.

"One of the first things that struck me about the play was the strong contrast of characterization without sacrifice of dignity on either side. On the one hand is John Breuster, the role I assume, a typical western American; the soul of honor, a fighter, yet a generous victor. In contrast to him is the English lord who displays absolutely the same qualities although giving them expression by wholly different methods of speech, manner and thought. Lord Wycherly is no less a man and a fighter than John Breuster and it is the opposition of two strong natures, each conscientious and chivalrous, that gives the plot its great vital interest and makes it interesting to Americans and Englishmen alike.

"I should like to think," Mr. Hanford proceeded, "that this play might contribute a little toward a more rational estimate of American character by Englishmen and of English character by Americans. I always feel a thrill of personal emotion when I come to the speech in the last act in the scene of reconciliation between the two big men who stand in my mind for two big nations. It runs this way: 'Lord Wycherly, before I acknowledge how deeply your words have touched me, I have a little confessing to do on my own account. You haven't said anything worse about my country than I have said about yours and I don't believe you were any further wrong. Your ways are not our ways, yours being the old road and ours the short cut; but we both get there just the same. In fact, sir, we are of the same blood and it's thicker than water. You're the mother country; we're the sons. You need us. We need you. So with all my heart I say, we've been good enemies; let's be just as good friends.'"

"BABES IN TOYLAND."

Some of the "Babes in Toyland" company must have been sleeping with the windows open lately; some others never had any voices for the draft to spoil. And with an orchestra sometimes playing too fast and sometimes playing too slow, and hardly ever just right, things did not go well. You should for the El Paso performance of the new musical, music, pictures, girls, tights, and nonsense.

The company carries a splendid looking chorus, well voiced, but lacking in training and direction, and some of the features of the performance were excellent, but on the whole the show was not what was expected. But for Miss Genevieve DeLaCour and Gus Pixley, who joined the company in El Paso, the performance would have been as fine as can be of a product two days old. These two performers saved the day (or evening) and the theatergoers left with a feeling somewhat akin to satisfaction, for while the show could not be said to be good, it was not bad. Pixley was either in bad voice from a cold or has lost his voice from age, one or the other, but still he got a good deal out of the several parts which he played, and he sang a great deal of merit at times.

Miss DeLaCour received a hearty reception when she made her first appearance and her friends and admirers were not a bit disappointed as her work progressed. She is very clever and just as cute as she can be in the role of Jane, the principal one in the cast. She has made good from the jump, and will do a great deal towards saving the show. She received three handsome bouquets from the audience, and seven encores on her comedy duet with Pixley last night.

Pixley's baseball game, assisted by Leon Mayor and Miss DeLaCour, was a scream from start to finish, and the aged comedian made good whenever he appeared—except when he tried to sing, which he couldn't do.

Marie Malatesta is quite a clever little girl in the role of Contrary Mary, but it is painful to look at her when she tries to sing anything of the ballad character. Her lighter work, she "gets by" with it and last night won applause.

Harry Ladell, who works with Miss DeLaCour throughout the show as one of the children lost in Toyland, gets off some good comedy and dances fairly well. But he is no Frank Daniels, Jefferson DeAngelis, or Thomas Q. Seabrook.

Helen McLeod as Tom Tom, if she has been told that she can sing, ought to be told all over again, but she is right good looking.

Grace Playerson as the sun queen, wears tights on a stunning figure and looks pretty. There are several in the company who look pretty, however, but they look like they don't make a successful musical comedy.

The company carries a lot of special scenery—the changing of which was rather bunglesomely done last night—and there are frequent changes of costume, most of which are pretty, although some evidence the ravages of time and one night stands.

CHAS. B. HANFORD TONIGHT.

"The American Lord," a four-act comedy in three acts, by Broadhurst and Charles T. Darryl, is the offering for tonight at the El Paso theater.

In brief, the story of "The American Lord" is that of John Breuster, a North Dakotan, who is about to be nominated for congress when he learns that through the death of Lord Breuster he has become heir to the title and estates of the fine old English house. He gives up his idea of going to Washington, and, although having little liking for some of the ways of the English, crosses the ocean to claim his own.

With his hereditary feud with the house of Wycherly and his good natured attempts to introduce his American methods of doing things, Breuster finds himself fully occupied. Imagine his feelings, then, when he discovers that his daughter and the son of Lord Wycherly are in love, and that his son has lost his heart to an English girl. Breuster makes it "three of a kind" by falling in love with an attractive Irish widow, Mrs. Westbrook, and the story ends most happily. Seats are now selling at the Crawford. There will be a matinee Wednesday at 3 o'clock, of the same bill.

SMITH'S BILL TO ENLARGE FORT BLISS.

Provisions of the Measure Introduced to Enlarge the El Paso Military Post.

The bill by representative Smith, of Texas, to provide for the enlargement of Fort Bliss, is as follows: Be it enacted that the quartermaster general of the United States army be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be enlarged, in such form as to him may seem best, Fort Bliss, on the United States government army reservation near El Paso, in the state of Texas, so as to provide suitable accommodations for headquarters and two battalions (eight companies) of infantry, two troops of cavalry, and one battery of field artillery, and for this purpose the sum of $600,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any funds in the treasury of the United States, not otherwise appropriated.

The bill was read twice and referred to the committee on military affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CONSUL THE MONKEY.

A new attendance mark for Monday night was set at the Wigwam last night. Owing to the great popularity of numerous requests for the Consul pictures, they will be given again tonight. This wonderful monkey has been the talk of the town among many picture lovers since its pictures were shown at the Wigwam. Two new pictures will also be shown. They are "When Woman Wins" and "The Fabulous Man." Special selections from "Babes in Toyland" will be played.

THE CRAWFORD.

"The Honeycomb" pleased another large house last night. The play is full of good, clean comedy and bright lines, ably handled by an excellent company. The same bill will run all week.

THE MAJESTIC.

"Serpenta" is a feature at the Majestic, in her snake dance, using live snakes.

CHINESE NEW YEAR IS ON THE WAY

Will Be Here in Another Month—Lots of Noise Is Assured.

Today one month ago China boys have New Years," said Wong Lee from behind his desk in the Imperial cafe last evening. Translated into United States this statement means that one month from yesterday, Feb. 10, the residents of Chinatown will celebrate the advent of the Chinese new year with all the noisy rites of a heathen people.

Chinese new year is an event in El Paso. In Chinatown the slant eyed citizens take a holiday for one week preceding the new year and celebrate one week after the birth of the oriental new year.

During this time the American laundries do a much increased business, for no China boy would so far forget himself as to touch the white devil's "washbasin" during the festive time. Fire crackers by the barrel are touched off in the immediate neighborhood of South Oregon street, and the consumption of Chinese booze is heavy in the local Chinatown.

The best furniture bargains ever known in El Paso can be secured at the year end clearing sale at Springer's.
